

Positioned on a 270° finger of land on the Intracoastal Waterway, this well-appointed house takes advantage of every view. Walkways shaped of copings stone and exotic tile wood lead the way to separate entertaining areas that define the outdoor space with a fire bowl and a feature pool.

SPLENDID INTEGRATION

A Blend Of Tropical And Contemporary
Architecture Warmly By Natural Materials Shapes One
Couple's Dream In Boca Raton

ARCHITECTURE: BOBB Clark and Benjamin Scheiner, Allied Architects, Boca Raton, FL
INTERIOR DESIGN: GARY WALKER, Louis Anthony & Associates, Boca Raton, FL
LANDSCAPE DESIGN CONSULTANT: Amy Casey, formerly of Silky Designs, Colorado, CO
PAVING: Palm Rivers, Alamo & Associates, Inc., West Palm Beach, FL
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE: David Whitford, David Whitford Design, Inc., Delray Beach, FL
1017 NW 44th St.
HIGHLIGHTS: Mike Koller, Sunny Isles, FL

LEFT: Through cocktail hour, guests relax in the great room's bar area or nearby in an intimate social grouping set with lounge chairs that front beautiful water views. The great room is actually two-sided, incorporating multiple activity areas.

RIGHT: Fans, rest and relaxation abound in the media room, where Thayer Coggin's carved rolls offer ample seating while Aquo Creations' pleated silk chandelier "Gard" gives an organic aesthetic. The suspended grid ceiling framed with two-inch-thick maple wood adds a subtle textural layer to the space that features walls of glass.

WHEN A WELL-TRAVELED COUPLE DECIDED TO BUILD A LINIQUE home in southeast Florida, the gods were with them. They found a 270' finger of land on the Intracoastal Waterway in Boca Raton and it was love at first "site." Scenic water vistas and lushly vegetated parks fired their imagination. What a bounty of views they envisioned for the home they would build. "This is a unique site and the client is a very educated consumer who owns multiple homes," architect Mitch Kurik says. And while he was referring more to the high-profile husband who was hands-on throughout the planning and building, the wife was also duly involved.

By the time Kurik and partner Benjamin Scheier joined the team for the architecture, the site was already purchased and builder Reese Alfonso was on board. Interior designer Curtis House soon joined them. Affiniti Architects had worked with House in the past. "We wanted someone with knowledge of different specialty materials, and ways to put them together and be architecturally joined," Kurik says. House was that person.

The design team and clients met to explore different styles of architecture, actualizing their idea with the use of Affiniti's 3-D equipment to create the concept for a dream home. The couple's new two-story, 10,000-square-foot house would be a blend of tropical and contemporary architecture warmed by natural materials. Concurrently, the overriding aspect was to integrate the inside and exterior spaces.

Open a three-layer stained glass door by McMow Ari Glass and step inside the entry, where 12-foot-high ceilings mesmerize and a stunning sapele wood-framed stairway adds sculptural interest.

One of the most striking examples of integration is the pool area. Glass mosaic tiles line a curvilinear trough that adds unexpected impact through a series of small fountains rising from its water. Walkways shaped of coquina stone and exotic Ipe wood lead the way to separate entertaining venues that define the outdoor area. Here, the horizon pool actually appears as one fluid entity with the main. Wood combines with glass once again in the dining room, where Zia Phero's red-crystal and aquamarine chandelier casts colorful shadows of light and dark over the setting crowned with artist Bruce McDunbar's carved sculpture from Eira Fine Art.

"From the very beginning, the owners were aligned about wanting a 'wow factor' in the kitchen," interior designer GuffaHouse says. Her accord with owner wood cabinetry designed by Fleming & Siskin, Inc., a breakfast space lit by Olson's "Coco" pendant fixtures with tops of lacquered wood, and dining views.

Intracoastal Waterway. The pool speaks "fun in the sun" with an integral spa, beach entry and inside water seating. Nearby, walls of glass reflect the views, while a second-story cantilevered lounge solid offers shade and harkens to the prominent use of wood inside.

"With most of the millwork, surfaces, architectural lighting, ceiling plans, built-ins and space planning complete, we had the inside of the house established," House says. It was time to decorate. Because the wife had established a bond with her Colorado interior designer, Aray Casey, she invited Aray to join the team primarily to select furnishings and decorative lighting. "We were all aligned with the vision," Casey says. "With email, Skype and visits, we made it work. We all had a passion for the design."

Indeed, the home is infinitely well designed with its rounded shape inspired by the natural curve of the site. It is also thoughtfully geared with spaces that open to the water inside, the entry is the genesis of a two-sided great room that incorporates a game area, full bar and an intimate social grouping perfectly positioned to enjoy the water views. A stunning maple wood framed staircase draws the eye in around the space. The first step of this streamer masterpiece is actually cantilevered and its beam below. Then following the bold application of maple vertically framing the stairway, House repeated the wood in a slim, curved air conditioning diffuser in the ceiling above. In gleaming contrast to the abundance of wood, polished limestone flooring flows selectively throughout the home.

But wood dominates most areas, including the media room with its sapele wood flooring underfoot and a suspended grid ceiling above. Each of the grid openings is framed with two-inch-thick sapele and houses indirect lighting. "House and I worked very carefully to get wood to work inside and out, and carry on with other materials," Karik says. "There is a consistency, but every space is unique."

Concurrently, the dining room ceiling consists of sapele-wood slats that complement the handsome glass dining table with its twisted wood bases. Nearby, a grand-scaled kitchen that runs the full width of the house enjoys a floating buffet and breakfast area. It also uses wood differently. Wenge wood cabinetry, for example, is topped with inch-thick perfluted bananaeal wood in sleek contrast to a horizontal stainless steel hood and majestic mosaic. With room to walk through and around, and incorporating every component imaginable that a great chef might covet, the kitchen is the sensation the owners desired.

"What made everything work is that the husband was basically the architect guy and the wife was the interior person," Karik says. "We didn't have one person driving a house." Most importantly, everyone had fun with this entire project. The clients knew what they wanted and the team delivered. ☺

Surrounded with panoramic views of the Intracoastal Waterway, this spacious outdoor loggia that borders the ocauma walkway offers the perfect spot for entertaining or pure relaxation during Florida's sultry days and breezy nights.